WHO WAS THE MAN WITH THE HON MASK.—A mysterious prisoner in France, wearing a mask and closely conlined, under M. De St. Mars, at Pignerol, Sainte Marguerite, and afterwards at the Baskie. He was of noble mien, and was treased with profound respect, but his keepers had orders to warp placed with profound respect, but his keepers had orders to warp placed with profound respect, but his keepers had orders to warp placed to the uncovered. A. De St. Mars himself always placed.

Note to above.—Some conjecture the second his presence Note to Bove.—Some conjecture the second his presence of Candia; while still more assert that he was the Count de Vermandois, son of Louis XIV, although he was reported to have perished in the camp before Dixmode. More believe him to have been taken off before Candia; while still more assert that he was the unfortunate James, Duke of Monmouth, who, in the imagination of the Loudouers at least, was secuted on Tower Hill. There are two better conjectures: he was said to have been either a son of Anne of Austria, Queen of Louis XIV, whose birth was concealed to prevent that civil diseasesions in France which it might one day have caused. The last conjecture was received by Voltaire and many others. It has been more frequently conjectured that Fonquet, an eminent statesman in the time of L
